What Affects the Cost of Car Insurance?

The amount you pay for car insurance varies based on several factors. From your driving record to how much you use your car, some factors are in your control, and some are not.

Here's a list of what you can expect will affect your quote:

State requirements – Each state has its own car insurance laws, with different minimums and categories of required coverage. The more coverage you're required to buy, the more expensive your policy is likely to be.

Age – Young drivers pay more for car insurance. After age 25, a driver's insurance rates start to decrease. On the other end of the spectrum, senior drivers are often charged more after 65.

Car make and model– Some cars are cheaper to insure than others. For example, a vehicle with high safety ratings can get you a bit of a discount. On the other hand, some cars are statistically more likely to be stolen.

Your driving record– The better your record, the lower your premium. If you've had accidents or serious traffic violations, you may be paying more than if you have a clean driving record.

Car usage – The more you're on the road, the more likely it is that you may be in an accident. As a result, car insurance companies charge you more if you have a long daily commute. If you only drive for leisure, you're likely to pay less.

Zip code – Depending on where you work and park your car at night, you might get a small discount or an upcharge. Big cities tend to have higher theft and vandalism rates and busy roads where accidents are commonplace.

While there are even more factors, including marital status or gender, one thing is for sure –Estrella Insurance has been quoting the LOWEST prices on car insurance for over 40 years. All you have to do is call 1-800-CAR-INSURANCE.
